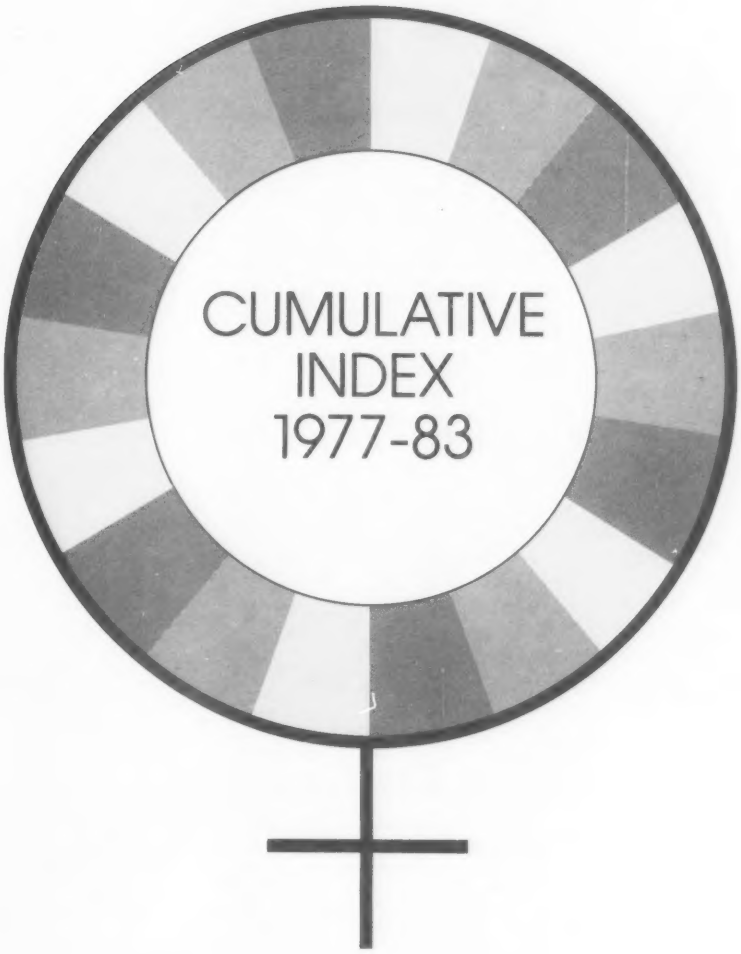
WOMEN AT WORK



INTERNATIONAL LABOUR OFFICE GENEVA

The promotion of equal opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation has been one of the main activities of the International Labour Organisation since its creation in 1919. The general objective is the attainment of effective equality irrespective of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction, social origin or other grounds such as age, nationality or family responsibilities, in accordance with the relevant ILO instruments.
Under its promotion of equality programme, the ILO places particular emphasis on the elimination of discrimination, whether in access to employment or at the place of work, and especially in respect of women, young or older workers, foreign or migrant workers and their dependants, minority groups and workers under the apartheid system.
Means of action employed by the ILO to achieve these aims include:

- development of international labour standards and monitoring of their application;
- research and studies;
- seminars and other educational activities;
- technical co-operation and advisory services to governments, to employers' and workers' organisations and to intergovernmental bodies set up at the regional and global levels.

This publication is the result of work carried out under the promotion of equality programme of the ILO.

WOMEN AT WORK

CUMULATIVE INDEX 1977-83

Women at Work (ISSN 0378-4770) is published in spring and autumn. Its purpose is to disseminate information on trends and developments concerning women workers. Through this news bulletin, it is hoped that governments, workers' and employers' organisations, non-governmental organisations, research institutes and individuals concerned with women's questions will be informed of ILO activities, news, ideas, events and programmes concerning women all over the world.

The Office for Women Workers' Questions was created by the ILO on 1 April 1976. Its mandate is to:

- study and disseminate information;
- promote action by governments, employers' and workers' organisations;
- promote, co-ordinate and assist ILO technical departments to develop and implement coherent programmes; and
- ensure liaison with the United Nations and other international organisations.
